Camp Kalsman's 1st Ten Years: Building a Jewish Residential Camp

The Union for Reform Judaism has a beautiful camp just north of Seattle in Arlington, WA. Come hear the story of how this magical place came to be from its founding director David Berkman. We'll learn about Kalsman traditions, the plans for growth, what's in store for the summer, and maybe even get an invite to come see camp for ourselves.

Thursday, March 9, 2017 • 10:30 a.m. - noon

*please note that in observance of the fast of Esther, no food will be served.

Evolution & Intersection of Race & Religion for American Jews

In the changing context of American categories of race and religion, Jews have found themselves shifting their identities depending on the times. Join 37-year-old Rabbi David Basior of Seattle's Kadima Reconstructionist Community for a discussion about how the changing landscape has affected Jewish identity, privilege and assimilation. Hear how a Reconstructionist perspective sheds light on the topic and bring your own personal stories of identity shifting as we will explore the topic together.

Babkas and Rugelach and Challah, Oy Vey

Are Jewish delicacies the secret to our survival and for generations to come? Are these traditional foods too complicated to make at home? Join Seattle chef and caterer, Deborah Brownstein, to learn her thoughts and experiences around this and more. You've likely tasted her savory and sweet treats if you've been to local, Jewish community events. We'll get to sample some more of them, through all of our senses, at this hands-on program exploring Jewish foods.
